Practical Ideas and Strategies

It seems like more than ever before, schools and districts are dealing with how to respond when students show signs of low motivation, disengagement, or reluctance to learn. Too often, efforts to address motivation have been reactive—waiting until students are failing or displaying negative behaviors before intervention occurs. Grounded in research and classroom proven strategies, schools can take a proactive approach by equipping teachers with tools and strategies that foster motivation and engagement before students fall too far behind.

To help you strengthen the training of your teachers, CASEY WATTS, a national presenter on student and staff motivation, has developed an exciting, cost-effective train-the-trainer opportunity you won't want to miss. This two-day train-the-trainer institute focuses on practical, ready-to-use strategies for improving student motivation and engagement across all content areas throughout your school day. Participants who complete the institute will return to their schools prepared to train Grades 3-12 colleagues on proven approaches for increasing student confidence, persistence, and investment in learning—ultimately leading to stronger achievement and more positive and productive classrooms.

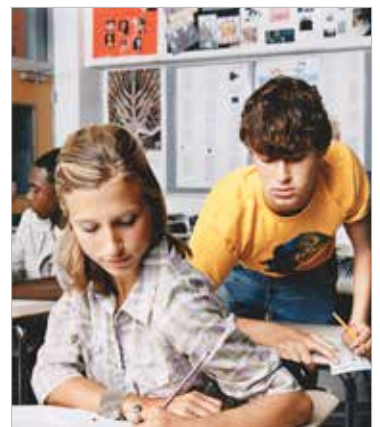

A Practical, Two-Day Train-the-Trainer Institute to Support Teachers in Improving Student Motivation and Confidence in Learning

Plan to attend as a school or district team, a representative team member or district leader to learn the best ways to improve student motivation. You will learn how to build on the success of your current practice, identify the key components that have the greatest impact on student motivation and find the specific areas you need to target for implementation and improvement. Leave inspired and equipped with the most effective strategies and training materials needed to train an unlimited number of teachers in developing or refining their understanding of student motivation. Join Casey to learn how to better support and motivate students in Grades 3-12!

Develop a Plan to Implement Practical Strategies That Improve Student Motivation and Boosts Teacher Expertise in Your Schools

If you are interested in providing higher quality training in student motivation for your teacher colleagues, whole schools, or your entire district, this is the perfect opportunity. Send one trainer or a team of trainers to this two-day program and they will walk away with an extensive digital resource handbook filled with the strategies and tools needed for their own training, along with classroom proven strategies they can use to demonstrate practical strategies that work. The focus of the two days will be on learning and supporting implementation of student motivation strategies and that boost student confidence and achievement. Most importantly, participants will discover dozens of tips and techniques for providing the best possible training to your teachers.

Support and Train Your Teachers by Expanding Their Toolkit for Dealing with Reluctant, Disengaged Students Learn:

- Lead staff training that meets the needs of your school or district
- Build student confidence, engagement, and motivation
- Recognize the attributes of the most engaging lessons and classrooms
- Apply professional learning tips and techniques to increase the success of your own staff training on student motivation
- More effectively redirect and focus students who complete assignments early
- Use practical new tools designed to foster and develop student confidence
- Better motivate students who feel overwhelmed by their challenges
- Implement instructional approaches that maximize collaboration and increase motivation
- Use the most effective methods that lead to better self-motivation and self-direction
- Proven strategies to cultivate and strengthen participation
- Apply science-based techniques to captivate attention in more meaningful ways
- Maximize interest and intrinsic motivation, grounded in research
- Maximize motivation through the lens of differentiation

“Great seminar full of awesome content! Not only great information to share with my faculty for their use with students, but helpful strategies for ME to use working with them.”

A Message From Institute Leader, Casey Watts

“You’ll leave with ready-to-use strategies and training techniques that empower you to help teachers implement more proactive interventions, inspire persistence, and re-ignite students’ love of learning.”

Dear Colleague:

As educators, we have all worked with students who seem disengaged, go through the motions, or need more motivation than we know how to provide as individual classroom teachers. We are left wondering what we can do to more systematically help our students become more engaged and interested in learning? We now know that that a proactive, schoolwide focus on student motivation and engagement can offer a better way to meet students’ needs earlier and more effectively, and serve as a great relief to your staff as a whole.

In this two-day train-the-trainer institute, I will focus on practical strategies for building and sustaining student motivation that you can take back and share in your own school(s). You will learn how to provide models, coaching, and training that equip teachers with tools to inspire even their most reluctant and disengaged learners. Some of the questions you and your teachers may be asking about student motivation include:

- How is building student motivation different from traditional classroom management?
- How do I help train teachers to use effective motivational strategies that truly reach disengaged students?
- What are the most effective approaches for fostering intrinsic motivation and student confidence?
- How can we respond quickly when students show signs of withdrawal, apathy, or resistance?

Together, we will explore the key elements of creating a culture of motivation and engagement in classrooms, along with ways school teams can collaborate to make the process efficient and impactful. You will leave with ready-to-use strategies and training techniques that empower you to help teachers implement more proactive interventions, inspire persistence, and re-ignite students’ love of learning.

You will walk away with practical solutions you can rely on— strategies for re-engaging reluctant learners, proven methods to inspire persistence and confidence, and a framework for creating a schoolwide training on student motivation. Most importantly, you’ll leave prepared to lead your staff in moving from frustration over unmotivated students to a proactive plan that helps every learner feel capable, motivated, and excited about school.

Sincerely,

Casey Watts

Casey Watts

P.S. In these two cost-effective days, you will learn highly practical strategies you can use yourself, and use to train others, to greatly improve motivation and confidence of your students in Grades 3-12.
