Practical Ideas and Strategies

Do you have students who struggle with executive function skills? These critical skills that help us plan, focus, prioritize, and control our impulses seem more difficult to teach than ever. When students struggle with executive function skills, they may have difficulty with tasks such as staying on task, following directions, and managing their emotions. This can lead to disruptive behaviors in the classroom, which can make it difficult for them to learn and for their teachers to teach.

This two-day train-the-trainer institute will leave you with greater knowledge and with the skills you need to train other teachers or staff. You will gain the tools critical to helping all students develop executive function skills. You will learn how best to train other staff about the different components of executive function, specific tools and tips for helping students improve their skills, and the most current strategies for improving learning and decreasing disruptive behaviors.

LISA ROGERS, outstanding presenter and behavior intervention specialist, has designed this fast-paced, strategy-packed, train-the-trainer opportunity to train your teachers and staff to use practical solutions to teach the skills that will help your students be more successful, both socially and academically. You will leave this training with the precise tools needed to train other teachers and staff. From dozens of strategies to use immediately to reach your students who lack the skills to self-regulate, follow directions, share, take turns, stay focused and remain calm in stressful situations, to presentation tips and strategies proven to be most effective when training others.

This two-day train-the-trainer institute focuses on how to increase the executive function skills of your students and how to implement a comprehensive plan for training other teachers. Participants who attend will begin to build expertise in applying specific interventions to significantly increase executive function skills that increase student learning and promote positive behaviors.

A Practical, Two-Day Train-the-Trainer Institute to Train Your Teachers to Improve Your Students' Executive Function Skills

Send one or more staff members or a team to this training program and they will return to your school(s) with professional development strategies and resources to support and train your teachers to work more effectively with students who need to improve their executive function skills.

Participants will learn:

- Tools and tips for training other teachers and staff
- Practical strategies to address executive function weaknesses that prevent students from finding success in school
- How to implement executive function best practices at the classroom level and the school level
- Demonstrations, activities, examples, checklists, and much more, including a comprehensive digital resource handbook you can take back and begin using the many resources immediately as you train other teachers and staff

This Two-Day Train-the-Trainer Program is Cost Effective

If you are interested in providing high-quality training in working with challenging behaviors of students to your teachers, school(s) or district, this is the perfect opportunity. Send one teacher or a team and they will leave with an extensive digital resource training handbook filled with the tools needed for their own training. The focus of the two-day training will be on implementing the crucial components necessary to improve students' executive function skills. You will leave with presentation tips and tools as well as dozens of practical strategies that can be used to help students who have difficulty maintaining attention and organizing their time, tasks, personal space, and materials skills.

Outstanding Strategies You Can Use Immediately

- Training tips and tools to lead others in strengthening the executive function skills of all students

Dear Colleague:

I am excited to invite you to a unique, two-day train-the-trainer institute focusing on best practices for teaching executive function skills to Grades K-12 students.

As an educator, you know that executive function skills are essential for success in school, work, and life. These skills include things like planning, organizing, managing time, and controlling impulses. Unfortunately, many students struggle with executive function skills. This can lead to challenges in the classroom, such as difficulty following directions, staying on task, and completing assignments.

Join me at this unique, two-day train-the-trainer institute to discover valuable tools and practical strategies that your schools can use immediately to help students who are struggling every day with executive function skills. You'll walk away with tips, tricks, and resources for training your colleagues in these highly effective practices. In this institute, you will learn dozens of practical, doable strategies to teach students to plan, organize, and manage their time. We will also look at how to increase students' ability to focus and stay engaged. You will leave with new ways to both help your students develop executive function skills and strategies you can use to train your fellow educators.

This will be an active, fast-paced, two-day event filled with activities and applications. You will have the opportunity to transfer and personalize training tips to make them your own. Don't miss this chance to discover a full supply of ideas and tools to use as you train others who work to increase the executive function skills of Grades K-12 students.

I look forward to meeting you at the institute.

Sincerely,

Lisa Rogers

P.S. Be prepared to leave with dozens of practical solutions to help all students develop executive function skills in a fun and engaging way. You will also be able to use these strategies to train others in your school(s) and district. I hope to see you there!

What Your Colleagues Say About Lisa Rogers

"Lisa did an excellent job of teaching the material but also incorporating it into her presentation. She tried to include everyone and was extremely personable. It was great!"

– Sophie Petratos, Middle School Social Studies Teacher

"We covered SO much ground these last 2 days! The breadth and scope of all of the resources is nothing short of amazing!! I cannot wait to share with my colleagues and family. Thank you so very much!!"

– Julie Horton, Special Education Teacher K-8

"This was by far the best BER training I have attended. Lisa was absolutely incredible. She led amazing discussions and she provided so many useful resources. This was truly amazing, I would love to attend more trainings by Lisa. I am leaving this seminar with more knowledge, many resources, and confidence in my teaching!"

– Danielle Harrison, SPED Teacher/Liaison

Uniquely Qualified Instructor

LISA ROGERS is an acclaimed presenter and veteran educator who specializes in helping educators. She has over 30 years of experience in working with students who exhibit difficult behaviors that prevent them from learning and socializing appropriately with others. Lisa's extensive experience provides a practical perspective for teaching students who have attention-seeking behaviors and self-regulation deficits including impulsivity, lack of focus and an inability to think and plan actions, which often lead to disruptive behaviors.

Lisa is a frequent presenter at local and state conferences and has developed extensive inclusive education training strategies. She is the author of Train-the-Trainer: Current, Best Strategies to Improve Executive Function Skills, the extensive digital resource handbook you will receive at the two-day institute. It is filled with research-based ideas and strategies you will be able to immediately apply or adapt in your own schools and use to train others.

You won't want to miss this unique two-day train-the-trainer institute where Lisa will share resources and provide solutions to addressing your students' most challenging behaviors!
