Dear Colleague:

"The Teacher's task is to initiate the learning process and then get out of the way"
– John Warren

As educators, we are greeted each day with a variety of students that make up our community of learners. We understand that each student in our classroom brings a different developmental, social, emotional, and academic background to us each day. Much like you, I want only the best tools, tips and tricks that will help accelerate the learning of ALL Third Graders.

In this information-packed seminar I will share with you a wealth of research based, classroom proven strategies and techniques to catch up your students who have fallen behind and push forward those who haven't. I have designed this live, online seminar to share dozens of the most practical ideas and approaches. In my experience as a third grade teacher and Instructional Coach for many years, I have successfully used these strategies to create engaging lessons where all students succeed.

From this fast-paced seminar, you will leave with the ideas you need to make the most of small group instruction, engage students more effectively, and maximize learning through intentional, gradual release. We will focus on how to integrate technology to support time management, opening up instructional time for meeting students' individual needs. These teaching strategies have not only impacted my Third Graders' foundational skills, but allowed me to create lessons with collaboration in mind. I know they will work for your Third Graders too!

I am eager to share these resources with you and am excited for you to walk away with new tips and tricks to add to your bucket of tools. Thank you for jumping into this jam packed day of learning. I am looking forward to sharing the best of the best ideas and helping catch up any Third Grader who has fallen behind!

Sincerely,

Jackie Pickett
