Practical Ideas and Strategies

This highly engaging seminar will highlight the best, NEWLY published children's books, including picture books, chapter books, novels, graphic novels, folklore, poetry, nonfiction titles, and more! Your instructors read and evaluate each new children's book, then develop fresh, innovative ideas to use them in all areas of your curriculum. As a bonus, they also find the best, new web tools and apps to pair with the books they share. Many of the ideas, apps and online resources are applicable to other books as well. This way, you can pick and choose the new books and activities that are best suited to your students and the priorities of your classroom or library. You'll also learn great ways to use technology to extend your interactions with readers about books in ways they love to learn.

Join us for a compelling day filled with engaging, ready-to-use ideas, highly appealing booklists, a comprehensive digital handbook, and unique teaching tips to introduce and fully extend learning based on the newest, most outstanding children's books. Engage yourself in an energizing celebration of the best new books and powerful ways to use them with your students!

Dear Colleague:

How do you manage to find the best titles to meet the needs of your readers while supporting your curriculum? Which books best support your programming? Thousands of books are published yearly. So many books, so little time! Perhaps we have the answer—a day filled with hot-off-the-press books for grades K-6.

Every year we read hundreds of new books, selecting the best books your readers will most enjoy. There is a wealth of new literature this year, with new authors, new illustrators and new titles that will grab your imagination. If you don't create your wish list during the seminar, we imagine you'll stop by the bookstore on your way home! And you'll be loaded with ideas to use the next day.

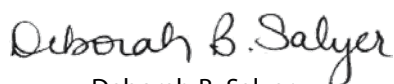

Our NEW live online seminar offers hundreds of titles for grades K-6 in many reading levels, subject areas and interests. It's important for a child to see himself—and others in what he reads, so we will look at new diverse and #OwnVoice titles. From wordless books to chapter books and graphic novels to nonfiction, this year's selections feature incredible debut authors and illustrators. Many of our favorite authors also published in 2020. And this year's nonfiction is better than ever. Classroom and content area teachers—you will easily be able to incorporate these terrific books into your curriculum. No matter your literacy support role, you'll also learn about ready-to-use resources that will help you teach the books or use them in your programming or class instruction. In many cases, the lesson plans and activity kits are already written for you!

In 2020, distance teaching became the new norm. In this year's seminar, we will continue to hone our expertise in this method of instruction. We will also explore free online resources that enrich the reading experience and support your curriculum – whether you are teaching at school or online.

The accompanying digital handbook is far from being just a list of books; it's full of support links you can read at your leisure. You'll find yourself using your handbook long after we part.

Reading is fun and together we can create lifelong readers! We look forward to seeing you online at this fun and inspirational seminar where we will immerse ourselves in the amazing world of the best of new children's literature!

Sincerely,

Deborah B. Salyer

Jonathan Hunt

P.S. Come ready to enjoy a fast-paced day full of outstanding new books—plus powerful tools and innovative activities to use with them.
