Dear Colleague:

Meeting the needs of our struggling readers has always been a daunting task. In COVID, this task has been compounded as many students' reading development was interrupted in a variety of ways. Catching up students who have fallen behind is certainly a challenge, but it is NOT insurmountable! Given the high-quality, targeted, and differentiated instruction they need, struggling readers can get back on track.

That is what this day is all about! As we prepare for the strongest possible start to the 2021-22 school year, the knowledge, strategies, activities, and assessments you gather in this live online seminar will help you teach your struggling students to be more successful readers.

During our day together I will share powerful, effective strategies that will empower both you and your grades 3-6 students. Some of the topics we will explore include:

- Assessing the ways in which readers struggle (they don't all struggle in the same way!)
- Creating powerful differentiated instruction that meets the needs of all learners
- Making best use of a gradual release of responsibility model to scaffold and move struggling readers toward independence
- Ensuring our reading instruction is explicit, engaging, and will stick!

It is my goal that you leave this seminar with renewed enthusiasm and a passion for meeting the needs of all readers, but especially those who have fallen behind. I hope you will join me for a day that promises to be dynamic, fast-paced, and packed with practical ideas!

Sincerely,

Annemarie Johnson

Annemarie Johnson

P.S. You will leave this seminar energized and armed with practical strategies to use immediately with your own grades 3-6 students – perfect for getting this new school year off to a great start!
