A Message From Seminar Leader, Joel Clements

Uniquely Qualified Instructor

JOEL CLEMENTS is an outstanding English/language arts teacher and national presenter. He is well-known for his fast-paced and strategy-packed seminars that focus on helping students significantly improve their writing skills while reducing teacher take-home paper load. Joel's wealth of experience in secondary ELA classrooms has given him the ability to try dozens of ideas with students – he knows what works and what doesn't. Joel is the author of Strengthening Students' Writing Skills While Significantly Decreasing Grading Time (Grades 6-12), the extensive digital resource handbook you will receive at the seminar, as well as the book Increasing Student Effectiveness Through the Use of Digital Resources. You won't want to miss this outstanding opportunity with Joel to receive dozens of ideas and strategies you can use to strengthen all your students' writing while saving you valuable time!

Dear Colleague:

It's Monday morning. You gave up most of your Sunday to grade essays. Again. You handed them back five minutes ago, and they've looked at the score and moved on. We've all been there. Teaching writing effectively may be the single most difficult challenge we, as teachers, face. In my work with teachers, I hear over and over, "We're asked to do the impossible." I have come to believe that – in my experience, that of my colleagues, and of teachers I meet all over the country – we are often trained in methods of teaching and assessing writing that are time-consuming and usually counter-productive.

As an ELA teacher at the secondary level I have faced these same frustrations many times. Over the last 10 years, I have developed numerous methods that have made my teaching more effective, given me my weekends back and made my teaching more enjoyable and rewarding. My grading is now faster and easier, and I have discovered my assignments and feedback have become far more substantive and have greater impact. Consequently, I have developed this new seminar to share proven ways you can organize your instruction to fit more into class time, reduce your paper load and most importantly, significantly improve student writing.

My goal is that you will return to your classroom with a wealth of practical strategies and tools for assigning and assessing writing to significantly improve your students' writing and greatly reduce the time you spend grading papers.

I look forward to meeting you at the seminar. The day will be packed with exciting new practices, strategies and perspectives that will enable you to teach and assess writing in creative new ways.

Sincerely,

Joel Clements

P.S. You will also receive an extensive digital resource handbook filled with practical, proven strategies, outstanding resources and timesaving digital tools you can use immediately.

"You will return to your classroom with practical strategies and tools to significantly improve your students' writing and greatly reduce your grading time."
