Practical Ideas and Strategies

Over the past decade the research has exploded in the diagnosis and treatment of students who have difficulties in executive functioning. Executive dysfunction is thought to be the underlying neurological difficulty for many of our students with special needs. In this NEW stimulating and interactive seminar, designed for grades Preschool-12 inclusive and special education settings, you will gain dozens of interventions and practical strategies you can use to help students lacking executive function skills. Join Kathy Morris, long-time and experienced teacher in the area of executive function disorders, for a day filled with ready-to-use ideas and strategies that will make a significant difference for your students with special needs who appear to be unorganized, off task and have self-regulation behavior issues. You won't want to miss this day filled with highly effective ideas and interventions to support your students to become more independent and develop greater executive control of their time, tasks and materials.

A Message From Your Seminar Leader, Kathy Morris

Uniquely Qualified Instructor

Kathy Morris has been a special education teacher for more than 30 years and a consultant for executive function disorders, behavior disorders, autism, assistive technology, and LIFE Skills, providing technical assistance, seminars and workshops to educators throughout the United States. She was named "Outstanding Educator of the Year" in her state and has served as Advisor to the President's Commission on Special Education. Kathy knows through experience what works for students who have trouble with executive function skills such as focusing, getting and staying organized, regulating their behavior, and making the choices that will help them be successful in school, both socially and academically. She is known for her fast-paced and interactive seminars that leave participants inspired to try new strategies with their students who struggle in school. You won't want to miss this day filled with highly effective ideas and interventions to support your students to become more independent and develop greater executive control of their time, tasks and materials. You will leave her seminar with renewed energy and a toolkit of strategies to help you be more successful in your classroom immediately!

Dear Colleague:

Children and adolescents who struggle with executive function disorders often look like those who just aren't paying attention, have difficulty making transitions or are purposely not controlling themselves. They may be unaware of the connections of their behavior and the consequences of the behavior. Their desks, backpacks and everything around them is disorganized and they may have an inability to plan ahead. The exciting news is that current research clearly indicates that this deficit can be effectively addressed with proper interventions.

In this strategy-packed seminar, designed for grades Preschool-12 inclusive and special education settings, you will learn how to recognize executive functioning deficits and how they can inhibit learning, along with a toolbox of practical strategies for helping these students get organized, stay focused for longer periods of time and be more successful in school. Strategies in self-awareness, work completion, task initiation, planning, and organizing, will all be shared as well as ideas for impulse control, motivation, self-regulation and more!

You won't want to miss this opportunity to understand how executive functioning or dysfunction makes or breaks students' ability to be successful in school, both academically and socially. Come and learn new strategies and interventions that will make a significant difference for all your students.

Sincerely,

Kathy Morris

P.S. You will also receive the extensive resource handbook I designed specifically for this seminar filled with strategies and ideas ready for you to try with your students.

'...you will learn how to recognize executive functioning deficits and how they can inhibit learning, along with a toolbox of practical strategies...'
